

IMPULSIVE

Synonyms: spontaneous, impetuous, erratic, flighty, capricious, hasty

Just being active helps dispel some of your anxiety, so you tend to take off on impulse, doing what feels good at the moment. However, when forced to perform to certain standards, you have the ability to do what is expected and required.

This individual tends to jump capriciously from one thing to another, resulting in a lot of half-done projects left hanging in the middle.

You need an environment with plenty of space and time to work alone, but with a supervisor near by. Having someone to answer to on a regular basis will help you to complete your assignments.

If left to your own devices too long, you may be tempted to go off in a new direction, leaving some tasks unfinished.

He works in fits and starts, dropping things in the middle and maybe not picking them up again.

Impatient and eager to get moving, this guy jumps to conclusions at the drop of a hat.

Although he is perceptive, he tends to seek information that will confirm his own prejudices, which can impair his ability to make sound judgments.

You throw yourself into a relationship with a white-hot intensity that tends to burn itself out rather quickly.

It isn't easy for you to stay in a lasting situation because you get bored quickly.

Spontaneous, maybe even impulsive, you jump into new activities without a second thought. You are responsive and outgoing in your expressions, reacting the instant something happens.

You tend to rush into anything that looks interesting, and may sometimes find yourself in deeper water than you had planned.

Because you are impulsive and focused on getting things going, you often neglect to make preparations and consider the possible consequences of your actions.

Often torn between the past and the future, you can be a bit impulsive when you do decide to try something new. Initial caution gives way to impetuosity and you jump in with both feet. Such versatility helps you to be even more creative, but it may make others a little crazy with your unpredictability.

Inactivity annoys her, so she may act impulsively rather than taking the time to plan ahead. She moves just for the sake of movement, and this could affect her view of employment--long-term positions may not hold her interest.

I would be willing to bet you have no schedule for yourself, even such as house plants get attended to on Thursday mornings. You are wonderfully impetuous and that is not bad. However, it should though not carry the decision all the time. For example, when finances are slow, one cannot indulge one's inspirations for spending. But even when finances are on better terms with needs, one sets up a rainy day fund that inspirations and impulses, no matter how aesthetically or nobly born, must be gently taught to sublimate. Gentleness is the way we discipline our impulses.

It is difficult for others to know how to respond to this individual, as her work mode and social style tend to be erratic. She will react to one situation in a particular way, then, when a similar circumstance occurs, have a completely different response.

Spontaneous and instinctive, you go with your gut reaction, following your hunches and improvising as you go along.

You may be very happy and upbeat, or you may be angry, but the mood doesn't last long as you quickly experience the feeling and go on to the next thing.

You welcome interruptions to the daily schedule and are always ready for the unplanned.

It isn't easy for you to be objective in your thinking because you are affected deeply by what happens around you and you tend to react very spontaneously.

He tries to control his emotions and impulses and then gets carried away by them. He probably does not know how he really feels other than whatever is the impulse of the moment. But he lacks the backbone to resolve on the best course of action and pursue it uncompromisingly--uncompromising honor and strength of character and values, that is.

Your feelings influence your decisions, and sometimes you will say or do things you don't really mean.